Prefatory Note.

THIS Volume contains the Press List of the selected papers of the Judicial Department from 1859—1868. The period is an interesting one. At its outset the administration of justice was in a very simple form. Criminal justice was administered by the Commissioners and under a special Act. Their verdicts went for confirmation to the Judicial Commissioner—successively Messrs. Robert, Montgomery, D. F. McLeod and A. A. Roberts—and sentences of death were confirmed by the Lieutenant-Governor. The first step forward was the introduction of the Indian Penal Code in 1862. The latter was by no means welcome at first. "I suppose we shall have to have it," writes Montgomery, who had succeeded John Lawrence as Lieutenant-Governor. The next step was the creation of the Chief Court on February 14th, 1866. The beginning of so important an institution was curiously informal. A telegram arrived from Calcutta saying that the Act bringing the Court into being had passed and ordering the new institution to be started at once. Doubtful if this were sufficient authority, the Punjab Government wired for confirmation and were told to go ahead. The last Judicial Commissioner, Mr. Roberts, was then sworn as the first Chief Justice and immediately proceeded to swear in his first colleague—Mr. C. Boulnois, Barrister-at-Law. By the introduction of the court the Punjab was relieved of considerable expense incurred in the trial of European prisoners. Up to 1866 all such prisoners, other than those subject to Military Law, had to be sent to Calcutta for trial before the High Court there. As this involved the sending down of all the witnesses, etc., it was an expensive luxury. There were quite a number of such cases and they cost the Punjab an average of Rs. 4,000 each. The business of the new Court rapidly increased in volume and before the end of the period under review there were proposals on foot for the appointment of a third Judge. There was also at one time some discussion as to whether the Court should not function in Simla in the hot weather, but this was not carried into effect. The establishment of the Court also brought into being another new official—the Legal Remembrancer. The first occupant of the office was Mr. Cunningham who began his labours in December 1866. The first Registrar of the Chief Court was Mr. J. W. Smyth, C.S. Another event which followed the establishment of the Court was the appearance of the first volume of "Law Cases" in 1868.

Ditto	In reply states that the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor concurs generally in the views expressed by the Judges as to the relative powers of Magistrates and Police Officers in respect to the removal and transfers of Native Subordinate Police Officers but His Honour apprehends that great injury to the efficiency of the Police Force will result if the ruling of the Court in the present case be understood by District and Divisional Officers to interfere with the powers of the heads of Police to effect transfers of men and officers without the permission of the District Officers. Suggests the issue of a circular pointing out that the ruling is not to be understood as applying to ordinary removals but only to transfers in any way involving, or connected with the excercise of the district officers, Judicial powers.
